Plagiarism and Collusion

Plagiarism and collusion are forms of academic misconduct that can have serious consequences.

Presenting the work of another person as your own is plagiarism. Failing to properly acknowledge where the work or idea came from is dishonest and unacceptable. This applies to all written documents, interpretations, computer software, designs, music, sounds, images, photographs, and ideas that were created by someone else.

Collusion is when work presented as your own has been impermissibly developed with others. This is equally dishonest and unacceptable, unless you have been required to produce a shared piece of work with other students, or you are specifically permitted to work with others as part of the learning objectives for the assessment task. You may not present the work of someone else as your own, even with their permission. Both the student submitting the assessment and student(s) willingly supplying unauthorised material are considered participants in acts of collusion.

More information about plagiarism and collusion can be found at <https://academicintegrity.unimelb.edu.au/>
